Slumbering Prophets and the Escape from Self:
How the Book of Jonah Mines and Undermines the Story of Noah

Two prophets, Noah and Jonah, seek to escape their responsibilities to help rescue humanity. As a result, both run the risk of losing themselves, one in alcoholic oblivion, the other by falling into a coma-like slumber. After a close reading and literary comparison of these two stories, we will address the question of humanity's potential for genuine and enduring self-transformation.

“Let All the Daughters Live:”
The Midwives of Israel and the Seeds of Identity

At first glance, the chronicles of the Tower of Babel and of the heroic midwives of Egypt seem to have very little in common. Yet the use of rare language and themes draw them together, exposing common themes of subjugation and the suppression of identity. We will note the human endeavor to reclaim identity, and then search for a nexus between identity and the beginnings of the redemption process.

About Judy Klitsner
